SUMMARY

After graduating from the Sciences Po Paris Master's program in Political Science, International Relations and Environmental Issues in 2008, I worked for five years at the United Nations Environment Programme, managing international research and operational projects on sustainable buildings and cities. In 2015, I obtained a research MSc in Sociology at the Ecole des Hautes Etudes en Sciences Sociales (EHESS), with a master's thesis focused on civic participation professionals in low-income neighborhoods. For two years, I produced research on the digital transformation of cities and citizen participation for a think-tank focused on sustainable development policies.

In 2018, I started my PhD research on civic technology policies and professionals in France. To fund my PhD, I worked for three years in a think-tank that promotes citizen participation, conducting studies namely on the uptake of digital citizen participation tools in local and national governments and on the civic technology market in France. I started teaching at University Panthéon-Sorbonne in 2019 and have continued teaching political science and sociology ever since, in Paris but also at the University of Avignon and the University of Lille. As my PhD defense is planned in early December 2025, I am currently developing a post-doctoral project on the international production and circulation of expertise on digital democracy.

JOURNAL ARTICLES

De Feraudy, T. « La civic tech : des professionnel·les de la communication numérique à l'assaut de la participation citoyenne (2016-2019) », Politiques de communication, 2023/1, n°20-21, p.195-227. DOI: https://doi.org/10.3917/pdc.020.0195

Title in English: "Civic tech: when digital communication professionals set out to conquer citizen participation (2016-2019)".

Abstract: From 2016 to 2019, civic tech professionals enter the public engagement market as providers of technologies and services, while claiming a role of cause entrepreneurs. These newcomers position themselves as intermediaries between citizens and the political and administrative worlds, while also offering to accompany the change and modernization of public action.

Their arrival on the market seems to endanger the fragile recognition and professionalization achieved by public engagement professionals. By importing references from the digital field to define their professions and skills, the civic tech professionals renew the tendency to consider tools and methodologies as the key elements in the success of citizen participation. Their integration in the start-- up world also leads them to redefine the professional balance between neutrality and commitment, legitimizing a form of entrepreneurial activism in this field.

Despite claiming technological neutrality and a position of exteriority, as technology developers and public policy consultants, these professionals produce definitions of "good communication" and "good decision making". By giving value to rationality, consensus, benevolence and individual action, these actors can contribute to discrediting conflict and activism. This startupization of public engagement, defined by the double mechanism of technification and de-singularization, can contribute to the privatization of the citizen participation problem.

Keywords. Participation, citizenship, digital, start-up, profession.

Title in English: "What does civic tech mean in France? When digital democracy entrepreneurs produce a public problem that can lead to depoliticizing citizen participation"

Abstract: This article focuses on the discourse about civic tech in the French press, between 2016 and 2019. It shows that the actors in the field build a promise that presents digital tools as allowing the modernization of public action and of citizen participation. Mobilizing the digital and entrepreneurship reference universes allows them to claim a role as policy intermediaries. The promotion of technicized and neutralized participation practices, as well as the increasing use of start-ups as contractors, which induces a privatization of the policy intermediation activity, tend to contribute to a depoliticized vision of citizen participation.

Keywords: digital, start-up, public engagement, entrepreneur

Title in English: Stop-And-Go Research: Working Conditions and Career Paths of Cifre Doctoral Students in the Humanities and Social Sciences

Abstract: This paper analyses doctoral work conditions and research production in the French "Cifre" framework. Through this agreement, a host organization (e.g. a firm or a non-profit) finances the PhD candidate by offering her a salaried position, and collaborates with a research laboratory. This mechanism is increasingly promoted as an alternative financing scheme for PhDs. Drawing on the results of a questionnaire survey carried out in 2020 among nearly 400 Cifre PhD students, our analysis shows that their trajectories and the concrete conditions in which they carry out their doctoral research, are conditioned by the unequal availability of material resources and the forms of supervision within the host organization. These specific work conditions and a weaker socialization to academia, rather than an individual "career plan" devised at the beginning of the PhD, steer Cifre researchers towards a professional integration outside the academic world.

Keywords: PhD, Funding, Cifre, Research Partnerships, Careers.
